BUILDING AN ADJUNCT FACULTY PORTAL

By Justin Allen

For the past few years, the Adjunct Faculty Council has been working to obtain a more accessible and robust web site that could offer much needed information and resources to both new and veteran adjunct faculty.

As we worked through different iterations of this project, a certain reality became clear. We need a website that is dynamic, reflective of adjuncts current and future needs, highly accessible, and able to be updated and maintained fluidly.

The purpose of this article is to acknowledge and thank the students and faculty who've worked on this project.

While the initial ideas and research began a few years ago and was spearheaded by faculty member James "Ron" Powers, we (the AFC) were gifted with a spark of innovation when faculty member Robert LaCrosse joined our team.

With a background in web design, Robert immediately brought to the table an assortment of ideas and questions that empowered us to move forward on designing something immediately. Robert also had the vision to involve his students, which gave this project its uniquely collaborative and student-led dynamic.

Robert has worked with various groups of students from his CTEC 271: Web Interface Design II class to realize this project.

Last term, students performed a SWOT analysis, interviewed Clark adjuncts about what content and resources they would want to see in an adjunct faculty web portal, researched existing sites, and proposed an initial outline of what this site should include. That initial leg work was picked up this term by another group of students who built the site's wireframe, continued seeking feedback from adjuncts, and are now in the process of building the living draft version of our Adjunct Faculty Portal.

This term's group performed the following roles:

- Account Manager/Project Lead: Peter Doherty
- Project Manager: Han Pham
- User Experience Researcher: Broedy Chase
- Visual Designer: Loc Hoang
- Developer: Dennis Vakulyuk
- Quality Assurance Tester: Jessica Sassmanshausen

This project is intended to offer a practical resource that all adjuncts will benefit from, but it is so much greater to know that it is a product of teacher-student collaboration.
